Part 3.

So strategies for a solution to this world crisis demand an integrated approach to the excluded and at the same time protecting nature.

Pope Francis stresses "that the gravity of the ecological crisis demands that we all look to the common good, embarking on a path of dialogue which demands patience, self-discipline and generosity, always keeping in mind that 'realities are greater than ideas'."

There is a need for a sense of social responsibility - the issue of environmental degradation challenges us to examine our lifestyle. We should no longer be caught up in a whirlwind of needless buying and spending.

Pope Francis suggests that there is a mobility in the duty of care for creation through little daily actions, simple deeds which we all could do. He gives examples.

Finally one cannot but agree when Pope Francis writes:-

"Happiness means knowing how to limit some needs which only diminish us, and being open to the many different possibilities which life can offer. Fin.
